

From: Dan Burnstein
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 11/16/01 9:26pm
Subject: my 2c

I am old enough to remember MS proudly telling everyone that they had a Chinese firewall between the applications side and the operating system side of the business. Then as they realized there was little effective oversight they 'forgot' about this division. Now we have no effective competition in the browser market and even less competition in the operating system market. They crushed the competition using illegal tie-in arrangements and punishing anyone who did not toe the MS line.

Stopping this behemoth is not easy and crafting a useful remedy is very hard. However it is doable with will and backbone. I doubt this administration has either.

Good luck.

Dan Burnstein
(software developer, lawyer)